NEWS RELEASE

GROWING UP AT OIL PALM PLANTATION TO BECOME A POLICE OFFICER

Jakarta, 4 July 2019 – This article tells the story of the family of Pak Yunan, plain speaking yet dedicated man who has been working for PT Windu Nabatindo Lestari, one of the first of Bumitama’s subsidiaries, since the very beginning of its establishment more than 20 years ago. At that time he helped to build the infrastructure of the area as a general worker, after which he was given the position of an operator for electricity generator because of his love for working around engines. He recalls that in the beginning there were no facilities and the plantation site resembled more of a campsite. It was only later that the employee housing, medical centre, schools and community centre were established by the Company.

Although having moved up the management ladder to work as foreman of the maintenance department, Pak Yunan has always wanted to see his three children grow up well educated and become more successful than himself. While his youngest daughter still attends classes at the local Bumitama elementary school, his other two children continued with their education after graduating from our junior high school. Pak Yunan's older daughter is currently taking a fashion course in Central Java, while his first-born son Andi Haryogi pursued his dream to become a policeman and signed up for training in Palangkaraya.

With the support of his parents, Andi successfully graduated from the academy and in 2018 got assigned to serve as an administrative assistant to the Katingan Regional Police Chief, where he serves until now. We are glad to have contributed to his education for 9 years and hope that his story will serve as an inspiration to our students to realise their dreams, to be able to do what they love and to build the first milestone to become the future leaders of this country.
